Office hours: Monday 1:30-2:30 or by appointment

This course examines the domestic experience of men and women in nineteenth-century Britain. It covers both physical premises, from urban slums through suburban villas and country estates, and their inhabitants both upstairs and down. Topics include the domestic ideal, gender roles, and master/servant relations.

Students will be expected to read the Steinbach text for general background knowledge, plus at least one source from each weekly list. Reading Steinbach alone is not sufficient preparation for class and will not count toward your participation grade. We will also collectively make our way through Middlemarch. Often cited as the greatest 19th c English novel, it addresses many of the themes highlighted in academic studies of the period.

Required texts: Susie Steinbach, Understanding the Victorians (Routledge, 2012)
George Eliot, Middlemarch (1871-2; Penguin 2003)

Other readings will be available online or placed on reserve in Weldon Library.

Grading scheme:

Book review (due 16 Oct.)	15% (1200 words)
Seminar presentation	20%
Participation	25%
Essay (due 27 Nov.)	40% (5000 words)

Learning outcomes

At the conclusion of this course a successful student will be able to:

- Evaluate evidence and assess historical claims.
- Assess historical approaches and methodologies.
- Articulate and defend historical ideas, arguments, and conclusions, both orally and in written prose.
- Engage with faculty and peers in discussion of both source material and the process of writing history.
- Contribute thoughtfully to debates about historical and methodological issues.
- Present historical knowledge effectively and engagingly.
