

Looking for a different kind of course?!
Join us in History 3813E: Public History!

This course provides an overview of public history- a field of history that involves communicating the past to a non-academic audience.

The theory and practice of public history are examined through a variety of sources, including articles, historical fiction, websites, television, films, exhibits, guest speakers, and physical sites.

Students will be acquainted with a wide range of professional opportunities, namely: archives and records management, film and documentary production, museums, parks and historic sites, historic preservation, editorial services, digital history, oral history, research consulting, and public policy development.
