War, Memory and Popular Culture

Research Collection

Department of History

The University of Western Ontario

INTRODUCTION

The collection is a diverse assortment of archival materials, microforms, published and printed documents, and secondary sources relating to the cultural dimensions of conflict and the collective memory of war. Its holdings, which might be broadly defined as ephemera, are strongest in a number of areas:

- popular culture artifacts
- materials relating to veterans organizations
- children's literature and educational materials relating to war history
- military training and instructional manuals
- wartime publications
- materials relating to prisoners of war

There are also a large number of personal files that vary in their content. Some contain a long range of correspondence or other material, while others contain a single image or artifact. The original materials in the collection are eclectic, and reflect the manner in which they have been gathered. The emphasis has not been on a coherent acquisitions policy, but rather on preserving materials that might otherwise have been lost.

Visits to the collection are by appointment only. Researchers who are unable to visit the archives in person may in certain circumstances be able to purchase photocopies of selected materials. For further information, please contact:

Personal Papers

Archives of the War Resisters’ International, 1921-1974

The WRI was created in 1921 at a meeting of British, Dutch, German, and Austrian pacifists at The Hague. Active in sixty-four countries, it has been prominent for more than fifty years in opposition to every form of organized violence, regardless of the policy objectives of the proponents of war. This source includes the minutes of council meetings from 1926, the executive committee since 1956, and the international minutes since 1956, as well as WRI pamphlets, all its bulletins from 1923, its newsletter, its secretary’s report, the file of press releases, and its major journal War Resister. A printed guide is available. [microfiche]

Fascism and Reactions to Fascism in Britain

This series, from the Imperial War Museum and the London Borough of Hackney Archives, records the history of British fascism and the Fascist Party in Britain in the years between 1918 and 1989, examining left-wing responses to this right-wing threat, including the attempts of various individuals, political parties, and state and community groups to defend themselves, sometimes violently. The materials filmed include private papers and personal memoirs, transcripts of interviews, journals, trade union minute books and friendly society records, newspapers, state records, and photographs. Mass-Observation Archive

The Mass-Observation movement was launched in 1937 by Tom Harrisson, Charles Madge, and Humphrey Jennings as an anthropological survey of the British people. Harrisson's team of investigators produced a documentary account of everyday life in Britain by observing, talking to, and recording the observations of people from all levels of society: at meetings, religious occasions, sporting and leisure activities, in the street, and at work. Part 6 of the collection covers the home front during the Second World War under the following subject headings: evacuation, youth, children and education, women in wartime, and anti-Semitism. The Stars and Stripes (43 reels, covering the Second World War)

The U.S. Defense Department's official newspaper for its troops stationed abroad, it is considered indispensable for the sense of community that it instills in soldiers, particularly during long deployments. Offering news and features on a variety of military topics, as well as an overview of politics, business and sports, the paper was particularly popular for its stories on local conditions and local troops. World War 2 through American Newsreels

During the Second World War, five major film studios (Twentieth-Century Fox, RKO, MGM, Paramount, and Universal) produced documentary newsreels to accompany their cinematic releases. To monitor covertly those films without raising cries of censorship, the US government created the Library of Congress Film Project in February 1942, which analyzed the newsreels for content and tone. This collection, which covers the period from 4 March 1942 to 30 March 1945, reproduces the issue sheets provided by the studios, the content analysis reports produced by the Library of Congress team, and the narrator's script for each newsreel.
