This is a draft syllabus. Please see your course OWL site for the final syllabus.

Course Description:

The development and effect of business in Canada from the late nineteenth century, with special emphasis on its social impact and the emergence of a Canadian labour movement.

Antirequisite:

The former History 2213F/G

Course Syllabus:

Businessmen as Heroes and scrooges; Labour activists as: Trouble makers. Popular perceptions of heroes and villains abound; history offers more nuanced images. This course examines Canadian both business and labour history within the framework of Canadian economic history. Key themes include changing business conduct, the varying fortunes of Canadian labour, evolving state roles, and implications of these changes. Ideally, students will add understanding of this history, while strengthening analytical and communications skills. Ideally, come with an interest in how Canada's economic development was shaped by the joint effort of entrepreneurs and workers.

Course Materials:

There is no Course text; brief videos, "Bullet Notes" and annotated Powerpoint slides are available on the OWL site. There are other course elements [e.g. Forum] in OWL related to participation.

Methods of Evaluation:
